

Welcome Remote ISTE Participant:

We are delighted that you have chosen to participate in Remote ISTE. This program, which has grown from a single site just a few years ago to multiple group sites and now individuals for the first time, is brought to you by ISTE's Special Interest Groups for IVC and Online Learning.

The purpose of Remote ISTE is three-fold:

- To extend the ISTE conference beyond the physical boundaries of the convention center.
- To develop interest among educators and encourage attendance at future ISTE conferences.
- To demonstrate best practices for distance learning technologies.

This year we are excited to announce the launch of a new asynchronous component of Remote ISTE.

Remote ISTE Web Site: <http://sites.google.com/site/remoteiste/>

This web site has been developed to tell you all about the Remote ISTE program, the ISTE conference, and the larger ISTE organization. The site is available to you before, during, and after the live Remote ISTE events on Tuesday, June 28. Here you will find:

Pre-Conference Resources:

- Program and scheduling information for both individual and group participants.
- Information for how to log on and test your Adobe Connects connection.
- Prerequisite equipment and software information for the hands-on workshops.
- Facilitated Google group discussions where our moderators will answer your questions about Remote ISTE and the ISTE conference.

Day of Resources:

- While the actual URL connections for each Remote ISTE session won't be listed on the Remote ISTE site, there is a Google group listed at the bottom of the Individual Participants page that will be moderated during the conference for your technical questions.

Look for an email to come from us on Monday, June 27 that will list the specific URLs to connect to each Remote ISTE session.

Post-Conference Resources:

- Continued moderation of Google group discussions on the various sessions that were presented during Remote ISTE for two weeks after the conference.
- Archive recordings of the Remote ISTE sessions.

We look forward to seeing you online on Tuesday the 28th!

Sincerely,

The Remote ISTE Program Team
